The Redbury New York, a hotel reserved for women

Nestled in the NoMad neighborhood of Manhattan at 29 East 29th Street stands an architectural gem that embodies both history and luxury. The Redbury New York, formerly known by various names such as the Martha Washington Hotel, Hotel Thirty Thirty, Hotel Lola, and King & Grove New York, is an iconic hotel that has withstood the test of time.

Opened in 1903, this 13-story Renaissance Revival-style structure was designed by architect Robert W. Gibson for the Women's Hotel Company. For 95 years, it operated as a women's-only hotel, pioneering a concept at a time when gender equality was emerging.

The fascinating history of this hotel doesn't end there. Its original namesake, Martha Washington, pays tribute to the first First Lady of the United States. The Martha Washington Hotel continued to provide accommodations exclusively for women for decades, creating a safe and comfortable space for female travelers at a time when options were limited.

But the story of this establishment goes beyond its historical legacy. It is also a designated New York City landmark,
