New Reported Sighting of the Loch Ness Monster

A new possible sighting of the Loch Ness Monster was reported on October 28th at around 2: 45 p.m. The witness, Mishawn Mielke from Texas, was visiting Urquhart Castle — one of the most popular vantage points overlooking the loch — when she noticed something unusual in the water.

According to the Official Loch Ness Monster Sightings Register, Mielke described seeing what appeared to be a head rising above the surface, seemingly belonging to a much larger creature.

“I first saw it and thought, wow, that really looks like the images I had seen on the sightings website,” she said. “It didn’t look like a wave. It actually looked like the head of something popping up.”

She also reported a distinctive movement in the water. “It made a pattern in the water I didn’t see anywhere else, almost like its own wake. And then it was gone. From that distance, I’d say the water pattern was at least three meters long.”

As is often the case with such sightings, there is no way to determine exactly what she saw. Although Mielke managed to take a photograph, the image is so blurry and distant that nothing can be clearly identified — a common issue with alleged glimpses of “Nessie.”
