

A little girl and her gifts of telekinesis ...

Telekinesis is the power to move objects by thought. According to science, the existence of such a gift is impossible. However, a mother of a family recounted that her daughter, when she was little, broke objects with the thought when she got angry ...

She shared her story on Reddit:

“When my daughter was little, whenever she would get upset, something in the kitchen would randomly break. It happened way too many times to be coincidental, and the things that broke did so in inexplicable ways.”

“I clearly remember one instance very early in the morning standing in the kitchen, telling her she couldn’t have cake from the night before. She immediately looked angry and I heard a weird 'plink' sound inside the cupboard. I opened it to find the plate on the top of the stack was cracked in several places. No signs of this in later years. She’s 24 now and I often allude to this and remind her boyfriend not to piss her off.”

This story reminds us of Stephen King's novel Carrie. In it, the heroine, a teenage girl named Carrie, is bullied by her classmates and abused by her mother. After a tragic event, Carrie's gift of telekinesis awakens whenever anger rises in her ...
