A Ghost at 30,000 Feet: Psychic Says Spirits Fly Ryanair Too

Flying is frightening enough these days—but imagine locking eyes with a ghost mid-flight. That's exactly what happened to psychic Chloe Smith, who says a spirit acknowledged her with a salute aboard a Ryanair flight.

"He was sitting next to a man, just five rows in front of me," Smith recalls. "He turned around and looked straight at me, as if he knew I could see him." The moment, brief but powerful, came with a silent message: I see you too.

Chloe Smith is no stranger to encounters with the other side. According to her, ghosts appear to her almost daily—in airports, hotels, swimming pools, and now airplanes. “They find ways to let me know they’re there,” she explains. “Sometimes it’s a look, a feeling, a small shift in energy. I’m never really on vacation. And you’re never really alone.”

 © Activité-Paranormale 2009-2026

As for who the ghost on the Ryanair flight might have been, Smith is hesitant to speculate. “Maybe he was there for a nervous family member. Or perhaps he was a former pilot who once flew that very aircraft. They often return to familiar places.”

While most travelers fear turbulence or delays, the idea of a ghost on board may rattle some even more. But Smith insists that the spirits she sees aren’t there to frighten—they’re often protective. “They’re usually gentle presences. Watchful. Caring.”

So next time you board a plane, keep an eye out. If you catch a ghostly figure waving, let’s hope it’s a friendly hello—and not a final goodbye.

Ghost - 1 juin 2025 - Rael2012 - CC BY 2.5

 © Activité-Paranormale 2009-2026