

Aliens may have underwater bases on Earth

Rep. Tim Burchett, R-Tenn., has made a bold claim: he believes that extraterrestrials may have established underwater bases on Earth. In an interview on NewsNation Prime, Burchett shared his perspective on the presence of alien activity beneath our oceans, suggesting that these mysterious beings could be hiding in the depths, away from human detection.

The idea of underwater alien bases aligns with growing discussions about unidentified aerial phenomena (UAP) that seem to emerge from or disappear into the ocean. Some experts argue that the vast, unexplored regions of Earth's oceans could be the perfect cover for extraterrestrial operations.

As interest in UFOs and government disclosures continues to rise, Burchett's statements add fuel to the ongoing debate. Could deep-sea mysteries hold the key to proving the existence of alien life?
